GDM features on National News from Mining Conference

Great Divide Mining Ltd (ASX:GDM) was pleased with strong national media interest following CEO Justin Haines' interview from the Noosa Mining Investor Conference, Nov 2025, where he spoke with a major television network about GDM's progress and the broader outlook for Australia's resources sector.

Speaking from the conference, Mr Haines said the resources industry is entering a period of record investment, accelerated by the recently signed U.S.–Australia Critical Minerals Framework between President Trump and Prime Minister Albanese.

"This agreement is going to drive significant capital into critical minerals, metals, exploration, mining and downstream processing," Haines said.

"It means more investment, more development and, importantly, more jobs right across regional Australia."

The Noosa Mining Conference, established in 2011, is now held twice each year, becoming one of Australia's premier events on the mining and investment calendar. It brings together more than 70 ASX-listed companies, fund managers, analysts, and over 2,500 investors. It is widely regarded as the nation's leading showcase for emerging and mid-tier exploration and resource companies.

Mr Haines also noted the impact of global uncertainties on the price of Gold.

"When I started in the resources sector back in the 1980s, gold was around A$250 to A$300 an ounce," Haines said. "Today it's above A$6,000. That's a 20x multiplier."

"That tells you everything you need to know about the strength of gold as a safe-haven asset and the opportunities ahead for Australian producers."

"GDM is exceptionally well positioned for this current environment and for the future."

"GDM is now a gold producer. We're de-risked across multiple projects, and we're well on the way to becoming a significant Australian antimony producer as well," Haines said.

"It's a genuinely very exciting time for GDM and our shareholders."
